

Today we had a remarkable opportunity to meet Eric Engineer from S3V venture capital firm based in Austin, TX. Eric shared his unique experience and gave us some valuable tips that may help succeed in the VC business as well as in the entrepreneurial world. Common delusion is that VCs invest in ideas, the truth is - they invest in operators. Self-aware and flexible founders who are able to frame the market have higher chances to find the VC seed. The VCs that are taking enough risk but keep it manageable have higher chances to survive. Eric pointed us at the most common yet still unrecognized mistakes entrepreneurs continue making and provided his forecast of the digital future from the VC perspective. One of our best speakers so far, and a truly passionate professional.
